				common priority for all municipalities and the provincial government. WHEREAS reducing vehicle speeds helps create calmer, safer neighbourhoods that encourage people to use active forms of transportation and to be active in their communities. WHEREAS municipalities across Ontario are increasingly adopting provincially regulated Automated Speed Enforcement (ASE) programs as a proven tool to improve road safety, particularly in school zones and community safety zones. WHEREAS in Toronto, speed cameras have reduced the number of speeding vehicles by 45% across 250 urban school zones, including an 88% decrease in vehicles travelling more than 20 km/h over the speed limit, and other municipalities with ASE are seeing similar significant speed reduction data. WHEREAS Ontarios police leaders view ASE not as a revenue tool, but as a traffic safety tool with the purpose of deterrence and prevention helping to change driver behaviour and reduce collisions. WHEREAS by complementing traditional police enforcement, ASE frees up police resources to focus on other pressing public safety priorities. WHEREAS municipalities are best placed to develop transportation plans based on their local knowledge and community input. WHEREAS the varying approaches across municipalities present an opportunity to promote consistency and alignment with emerging best practices province-wide.

WHEREAS municipalities across Ontario are increasingly adopting provincially regulated Automated Speed Enforcement (ASE) programs as a proven tool to improve road safety, particularly in school zones and community safety zones. WHEREAS in Toronto, speed cameras have reduced the number of speeding vehicles by 45% across 250 urban school zones, including an 88% decrease in vehicles travelling more than 20 km/h over the speed limit, and other municipalities with ASE are seeing similar significant speed reduction data. WHEREAS Ontarios police leaders view ASE not as a revenue tool, but as a traffic safety tool with the purpose of deterrence and prevention helping to change driver behaviour and reduce collisions. WHEREAS by complementing traditional police enforcement, ASE frees up police resources to focus on other pressing public safety priorities. WHEREAS municipalities are best placed to develop transportation plans based on their local knowledge and community input. WHEREAS the varying approaches across municipalities present an opportunity to promote consistency and alignment with emerging best practices province-wide.
